Here and There

Editorial By ALEX. H. WASHBURN

Too many cooks, says the proverb, spoil the broth—and Louisiana's audacious "Kingfish," disturbing the L. S. U. football game, seems to have had at least his thumb in the soup, with the possibility of putting his foot in it before he is through.

Hope-Ozan Road Is Being Regaveled by Highway Dept.

Hope-Washington Section Is First to Be Put in Good Repair

500 YARDS PER MILE

Graveling Will Be Extended Later From Ozan to Nashville

A complete new coat of gravel will be placed on the Hope-Ozan road between now and the latter part of January, Frank Burnside, district highway engineer, announced Tuesday.

After its completion the Ozan-Nashville section will be gravelled.

Work operations started last week with the highway department furnishing gravel which is being hauled from pits near Blevins, and the FERA is providing labor.

Mr. Burnside announced that the Hope-Washington stretch would be completed first, due to the fact that the road is badly in need of repair.

About 500 yards of gravel is being spread per mile. When completed, the road should be in shape for easy travel in all weathers.

The Hope-Ozan road was first gravelled in 1919. Since that time part of it has received patch work, but at no time has the road been completely gravelled in a single operation.

Nearly a dozen trucks are being used daily. Each hauls from one and a half to four yards of gravel per load.

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia—(AP)—The entire Yugoslav cabinet resigned Tuesday shortly after the resignation of Bogolyub Yevitch, foreign minister, who conducted the settlement at Geneva of the recent crisis with Hungary.

By the terms of the League of Nations settlement Yugoslavia abandoned her selfish plans against Austria, agreeing to leave the verdict of responsibility for the assassination of King Alexander up to neutral observers.

Roosevelt Urges Uniformity in Letter to the 48 Governors

WASHINGTON—(AP)—A letter to the 48 governors suggesting modification of home loan restrictions to permit use of the federal housing program was made public Tuesday by President Roosevelt.

The letter was sent at the request of Housing Administrator James A. Moffett, who explained that there are in the states various statutory limitations upon loans and investments which restrict ability to benefit fully from the national housing program.

Power Companies' Offer Is Rejected

U. S. Cites Canadian Rate of 2 1-5 Cents Against Our 5 1-2

WASHINGTON—(AP)—The administration Monday night rejected, through its Power Commission, the suggestion of Thomas N. McCarter, president of the Edison Electric Institute, that the government co-operate with the power industry in seeking an early Supreme Court test of the constitutionality of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Frank R. McNinch, chairman of the Federal Power Commission, said that the Roosevelt power program had the support of the people, congress and the executive departments.

Of McCarter's suggestion, McNinch asserted: "In all the history of the American government no parallel for such a proposal can be found."

"The call is not for the government to halt, but for the industry to catch step and move forward along progressive lines," he said.

The memorandum McCarter left on the president's desk declared more could be obtained by co-operation between the government and the power interests to preserve the "soundness of existing investment" than by "governmental competition or strangulation."

McNinch, saying that the McCarter "memorial" was immediately referred to the Federal Power Commission by Mr. Roosevelt, termed McCarter's statement "a confession of the abuses of the electric power industry and an appeal against the efforts of the government to correct these abuses."

McCarter defended rate making by

Jones Has Orally Resigned as Coach

L. S. U. Mentor's Action Stands Unless Peace Is Patched Up

BATON ROUGE, La.—(AP)—The Louisiana State University football squad was sitting in the middle wondering Monday night if their coach, "Biff" Jones could survive the heated argument he had with Senator Huey Long during the Oregon-L. S. U. game Saturday when Jones refused to let Long talk to the team at the half when the Tigers were trailing the Oregonians.

Long challenged Jones' authority to prevent his talking to the squad and the conversation went like this: "I want to talk to the team," said Long.

"No," replied Jones. "Who will stop me if I do?" "Well, you won't talk."

"You had better win this game." "Well, if I don't I guess I'm through?" asked Jones.

"Well, get this. Win, lose or draw, I'm through," shouted Jones, trembling in anger.

"All right," yelled Long. Long did not talk to the team at the half, but Jones did and the Tigers came out and won the game by one point.

After the game, alumni and university officials sought to smooth out the row but Jones said he was not sure he wanted Jones to stay and Jones refused to say anything about the incident.

Biff Jones, officially Capt. Laurence Jones, came to Louisiana State University from West Point on a military assignment from the War Department and took over the football squad as head coach. When he arrived, Long announced that Jones and his staff would have entire charge of the running of the football squad and that the senator would not interfere as he had done under the former coach.

In the three years he has coached the team, Jones has prevented Long dealing direct with the players and at times Long chafed under the restraint as he liked to refer to "my university and my football team."

As the situation stood Monday night, Jones verbally notified James M. Smith, university president, his intentions to resign. If the row can be patched up, Jones probably will remain another season, otherwise he may be transferred by the War Department.

In Washington, the War Department said that Jones could resign at any time as football coach as his assignment at L. S. U. officially was military duty.

Louisiana's House Transfers Control of 15,000 Teachers

Lone Representative Opposes March of "Kingfish's" Machine

20-MINUTE BLAST

But Huey Strikes Again at Corporations and Mayor Walmsley

BATON ROUGE, La.—(AP)—After a fiery one-man opposition, Senator Huey P. Long Tuesday promised to "back down" on legislation which would give him control of the state's 15,000 school teachers—but a cheerfully submissive House of Representatives just the same passed that measure and 32 others at the rate of three a minute, a new Long legislative record.

Representative G. M. Lester furnished the lone opposition, making a 20-minute speech denouncing Senator Long.

Although Long, as he unloaded an armful of bills at Sunday night's opening of the legislature said that the measures were "not important" and "just a few little things," it developed during the committee hearing that they dealt with important affairs.

"Little Things" included the delivery of heavy body blows to the New Orleans politically hostile Old Regular faction which runs the city government in opposition to Long.

One bill, as Long explained it before the committee, takes away the employment privilege from the New Orleans Board of Tax Assessors. Another does the same thing in regard to the state tax collector.

The New Orleans city hall was told in another bill that it could not hire more than three assistant city attorneys. Long asserted that there were "at least 16 now," and that "you couldn't see some of 'em if you stayed around the city hall all lifetime."

Practically every measure rapped hard at some political opponent or served to strengthen the "Kingfish's" power.

Not all the bills were exclusively punitive. Some, without being aimed specifically at any one politically antagonistic official or community, were broadly intended to expand the dictatorship of the state government over parish and city governments in general.

One greatly increased Huey's tax on corporations. Even so, all anyone knew about the

Insulin Lengthens Life of Diabetic Child

Discovery of insulin has made it possible for children, who have the disease, to live long and useful lives.

However, there is no disease affecting mankind in which life and death are so close together as they are in diabetes in children, because the failure of some insulin when needed will result promptly in the appearance of the unconsciousness called coma which moves on to death. The responsibility, therefore, of every one connected with the care of the condition, including parents, nurses and doctors, is great.

Diabetes is rare in infancy and quite infrequent up to the age of four years. Most of the cases in children come on during the period between 8 and 12 years.

The structure of the body, or lack of certain parts responsible for diabetes, may have some hereditary connection.

In the control of diabetes, it is not only necessary to use insulin which supplies the material that is not given to the body by the pancreas in such cases, but also to control the diet. It must be borne in mind that children require food not only for their daily needs but also for tissue repair and development.

However, the diabetic child should never eat more food than is necessary, since an excess of food will result in an excess of sugar in the blood.

The highest total number of calories allowed for the child with diabetes is 1500 daily. Beyond that the diet of the diabetic child differs little from the well-balanced diet of the normal child, and it avoids all extremes in sugars.

In giving insulin in such cases, the best method is to use the least possible daily amount. Frequently these children get along with two injections of the insulin daily, but in some cases three are required.

An overdose of insulin results in a serious condition—namely, a lack of sugar in the blood, which produces severe symptoms. Everyone associated with the child must be informed concerning these symptoms. This includes particularly the teachers who take care of the child when it is away from its parents and nurses.

With the use of insulin more and more children are developing to advanced years, and there is some hope in the fact that occasionally the development of the gland called the pancreas is such that less and less insulin becomes necessary.

A complete cure of the disease is not expected. There is some evidence, however, that in some cases the disease stops advancing when the child is full grown.

The occurrence of any other disease at the same time, of course, lays a special burden on the diabetic child.

Blames Bank Crash On Fear of F.D.R.—Hoover's Ex-Secretary Says Election Broke Confidence

We failed to come out of the depression in the winter of 1932-33, says Theodore G. Joslin, former secretary to Herbert Hoover, because Hoover was beaten in his fight for re-election and because public fear of the "unsound policies" of the incoming Democratic administration destroyed confidence and caused the banking holiday of February and March, 1933.

Mr. Joslin presents this point of view in "Hoover Off the Record," an intimate study of Mr. Hoover during his last two years in office.

He offers the following explanation of the depression's continuance—which, by implication at least, is Mr. Hoover's explanation:

We were emerging from the depression in 1932. The uncertainties of the election put a crimp in the recovery which the sane and constructive policies of the Hoover administration had started. After the election, the general public became so panic-stricken at the prospect of Mr.

Roosevelt's advent that things went from bad to worse. Ultimately all the banks closed—a direct reflection of public distrust of the Democrats and of Mr. Roosevelt's refusal to co-operate with Mr. Hoover.

What you will think of this book, I suppose, depends on your political point of view. It gives a detailed, inside picture of Mr. Hoover's actions during the last half of his term and demonstrates that he at least worked about as hard at his job as any president in history. An 18-hour day, says Mr. Joslin, was a commonplace in the Hoover regime; toward the end, Mr. Hoover cried that he wouldn't live the last nine months over for "all the money in the world."

Published by Doubleday, Doran and Co., the book sells for $3.

Christmas Shopping Helps Jack and Sue—Even Bad Buying Is Worth the Cost

Of course, you are taking that small margin of cash called "Christmas money" and giving Jack and Sue part of it to spend on their own shopping. If there is no margin, you can't, but quite a number of people say so yet somehow manage to tap the old nest-pot by some sort of abracadabra to produce a few rusty shekels.

Well—anyway, it is a grand idea to let the youngsters in on it if possible. Especially if they are over eight or nine years old.

By this time they will be getting as much thrill from buying and giving as in getting—or almost as much.

Teaches Responsibility

It seems simply awful to bring up the matter of training in December. And I apologize. But, as a matter of fact, these happy interludes in life are the very best possible times to get over little lessons in reliance and responsibility.

Jack with his dollar and Sue with her eight bits are potential investors and distributors. Theirs is the responsibility now to get the most for their money, to divide it so it will do the most good, and compare prices. It is also up to them to write little cards, the packages neatly and deliver—a real job if you ask me.

"But they have such ridiculous ideas," you protest. "It seems a crime to actually waste even a dime. Such awful things as they buy."

Every lesson in life costs something. Cheap at a dime. Most lessons are learned by mistakes and cost rather dearer than that.

Yet, are these mistakes? Just what is a mistake exactly? Perhaps that was one of your mother, when you bought a vase for Mrs. Gay knowing she was breaking up her home in the spring.

Children Like the Best

Naturally children like to buy the best. They have taste and a sense of values we seldom give them credit for, although their ideas may not be ours.

Jack says: "I got Pete a tie for a quarter, but I don't s'pose he'll wear it. If I could have paid fifty cents there was a swell blue one, but I hadn't enough money." And Sue has a like complaint.

Then you might explain that every time you shop you are invariably that other pair of shoes, that other tablecloth, that other lamp that costs exactly twice as much as you can afford either for yourself or others. That is what shopping means. To keep within one's budget and be satisfied and hoping others will be too. If a gift is appreciated only for its own value there is nothing we can do about it.

It is really unkind to make merry over children's little forays into the stores, and their subsequent selections. Real Christmas merriment is never at anyone's expense, and should never be at the children's.

Dear Santa Claus:—I am a little boy 8 years old. I go to school at Spring Hill and I have been a good little boy. I mind my teacher and I want the sweetest faces I ever have seen. Tender and faintly smiling, expertly made up, it was framed by a smooth, carefully groomed coiffure that enhanced each soft feature. She proved conclusively that middle age can be as fetchingly attractive—a shining example of what a woman can do to keep lovely through the years.

A woman of about the same age nearly was a sharp and not very pleasant contrast. She, poor thing, apparently had put on make-up and arranged her hair in an effort to appear quite young. Her rouge was too vivid, powder so thick that it emphasized the lines in her throat, and hair done up in debutante-ish ringlets that were far from flattering, if not actually ridiculous.

Every mature woman should realize the importance of a becoming coiffure. It doesn't necessarily have to be straight—if waves are flattering, by all means wear them—but, whether long or bobbed, it should be rather dignified and completely in keeping with your age and clothes. It always must be sleek, shiny and clean, too.

In addition to a hot oil treatment once a month and shampoos every ten days, a nightly brushing is important. If you dye your greying locks, have them retouched often enough to prevent streaks and an untidy look. If you have your hairdresser do all she can to make the white hairs absolutely pure white. As a matter of fact, there's much to be said in favor of white hair. It not only softens the features, but gives you a chance to wear all the pretty soft shades of pink, blue, lavender and green that you never dared select before your hair turned.

There are two sides to this, Oscar," Peter said, "but this isn't

ANN HOLMETER, pretty and 20 breaks her engagement to TOBY KENDALL, commercial artist, because of his drinking and general irresponsibility. The same day PETER KENDALL, wealthy and prominent, learns how VALERIA BENNETT, his fiancée, has deceived him, and tells her everything is over between them.

Ann and Peter, both heart-sick and disillusioned, meet in a restaurant. When Peter asks her to marry him, Ann agrees.

They are married that night and set out for Florida. They spend several weeks there happily until Peter is called home again because of business. All of the Kendall family snub Ann except Peter's sister, MILICENT, who becomes a staunch friend. Peter's grandfather refuses to see Ann and urges his grandson to divorce her.

Troubled with the employee "breaks out at the Kendall factory. NOW GO ON WITH OUR STORY!"

CHAPTER XXIII
OLD Peter Kendall smiled. There was no use trying to threaten his grandson. This thing would have to work itself out. Give the marriage six months and young Peter would doubtless be ready to put the whole thing in a lawyer's hands.

Meanwhile there was the trouble at the factory to be straightened out. He told Peter about Eric Oleson and the committee. There might be difficulty in going forward with his plans.

"I'll drop by and have a talk with Oscar," Peter said. "I can use Eric on a job in town."

"That might be a good idea. I would take him back but right now it wouldn't do. It would be setting a bad precedent. The boys must know they cannot start trouble at the factory."

Peter drove to Eric's house which he found shut and padlocked.

A small boy from the porch next door volunteered information. "Eric's gone away. He took his wife and the children to Oscar's house."

"Thanks, Sonny," Peter got into his car and drove to Oscar's place, a quarter of a mile away. Smoke curled from the chimney of the small, weathered home where Oscar had lived since Peter was a child. He had an idea that it must be crowded with the extra family.

Oscar opened the door. He shook hands with Peter, but there was a look in his eyes that was new.

The genial, gray-haired former Peter had known from babyhood had vanished. Here was a tired, bitter, dispirited old man.

Four children, ranging in age from around two to eight years, were playing in the back of the room. Eric's wife, a faded, work-worn woman, prominently arrayed in her hair, holding a small baby in her arms.

PETER was out looking for work, his father told Peter, abruptly opening the subject again in his mind.

"That's what I came to see you about," Peter said. "I can use Eric on a job in town."

Oscar shook his head. "I'm afraid Eric won't take it, Mr. Peter. We're not looking for clarity yet. Eric's hard up, but he wouldn't want a job from you after your granddad kicked him out. We Olesons have put a lot of ourselves in the factory and what have we got from it? Eric was fired without warning because he was a little hot-headed."

"There are two sides to this, Oscar," Peter said, "but this isn't the time for argument. Eric talked too much at a critical period. At any other time my grandfather would have overlooked it. Meanwhile Eric must have work to support his family."

"He'll have to find it some place else, Mr. Peter. As I said, we don't want clarity. He can stay here until he can open his place again."

Peter drove home soberly, thinking of Oscar's words. What had they gotten out of the factory? Not even security. Eric's small, barren house was closed. Oscar's meager livelihood stretched to cover the needs of two families instead of one.

As he passed Kendallwood the big, old-fashioned house was wrapped in shadow—shadows that seemed deeper than usual, ominous.

Peter let himself in his office. A girl waited, reaching out her hand. "Hello, Peter."

Peter said, "Hello Valeria."

She continued to sit, smiling at him.

Peter sat down and waited. "You can't refuse me this. I need your help. I haven't confidence in anyone else."

"What's the trouble?" Peter spoke curtly. This was carrying things a little too far—Valeria coming to his office and waiting after the others had gone.

Valeria explained sweetly. She and her aunt were moving back to their country place because the cost of living in town was so great. With prices rising it was the only sensible thing to do. But the place in the country was impossible. It would be necessary to have the old house modernized.

"I'm awfully busy right now," Peter said. "I'd rather you'd get someone else."

"I wouldn't trust it to anyone else. It surely won't take much time. Only a trip or two out there."

PETER was thinking that he could put Paul on the job after he went over the place and decided what was needed.

Beside the work on hand, he had another job which would be a surprise to everyone. Doing over the interior of the home he had purchased, Peter hadn't been able to resist having the place because he had decided when he saw it that it looked as though it had been built for Ann.

"You will help me, won't you? It's unfair to be unfrankly when I've forgiven you for everything."

"When do you want me to go over the place?"

"Couldn't we drive out tomorrow afternoon?"

"I'm going to be busy until about noon. Suppose I meet you there between four and five?"

"Ann, Louise and I will be there all afternoon. Come when you are ready. Peter, I bet Ann Louise takes the car on home. I planned to take a taxi, but if you could drive me by your way—"

Millicent saw them leave the building and get into Peter's car. Millicent dropped in unexpectedly on Ann next morning and went straight to the point. "Ann, it might be well to watch Valeria. I saw her leave Peter's office yesterday and drive off with him. As a rule, I don't tattle. But Valeria is such an old hand at the game, I thought I should warn you."

"Thanks, Millicent," Ann said.

"I'm afraid there's nothing I can do. Peter has a right to choose his own friends."

"Nonsense. Of course there's plenty you can do. Plenty any girl can do to put a stop to such things."

Millicent thought Ann had taken the news like a good sport. She respected her for it. Peter was lucky because Ann would never whine or nag.

"Don't worry too much, Peter's really not the double-crossing kind. But Valeria has a bag full of tricks. Keep your eyes open and if you don't like what you see, tell Peter so."

THE next few weeks were unusually quiet for Ann, with Peter's time so occupied. He was busy. It was only necessary to step inside the downtown quarters where typewriters were clattering, people coming and going, and the telephone ringing constantly to know that.

Ann thought of Sarah going about her work, and envied her. In the big apartment Ann had nothing at all to do. Everything was done by servants, quickly and efficiently. Ever since Millicent's dance, Peter had seemed a different person—rushing away each morning, quiet and thoughtful when he was at home.

More than once Ann had planned to talk to him about themselves and the solution of their problem. But something held her back. She had simply drifted, waiting. Waiting for something to happen—she did not know what.

On an impulse she called Sarah one day. "It's been such an age since I've seen you," Ann said.

"That's what I've been thinking. Trying to higher me?"

"I don't know what's the matter. Maybe I'm developing spring fever."

"What's on your mind?"

"Sarah, have lunch with me downtown."

"I'd love it. What about 1 and husband?"

"Busy," Ann said, trying to sound nonchalant and bright, and not succeeding.

Sarah hung up, troubled, deciding things were not moving any too well in the Kendall ménage. What a queer world! There was Ann, who loved going places and doing things, shut up in an apartment. It was not very sporting of Peter to neglect her so soon. Somehow Sarah had expected him to behave differently.

And there was Tony, as savage and unhappy as ever. Every time Sarah looked at Tony she thought of fire, smoldering, ready to burst out at any moment into a fierce flame.

Once he had attempted to talk to Tony but he had not her effort with a foreigner. "Tipe down, Sarah."

She met Ann at a smart downtown tea room. Ann was waiting for her. After giving their orders, Sarah began a brisk outline of happenings at the library. Suddenly she realized Ann was not listening. Sarah, following the direction of Ann's gaze, saw a smart-looking blond girl at a table in a corner. She recognized Valeria Bennett.

Valeria had seen Ann and bowed and smiled. She held aside her cigarette and came to their table.

A number of songs were sung, with Miss Eva Jane Rider at the piano. Mrs. Oscar Wilson read an article on "Know the Child." "Motivating good habits," by Mrs. B. Simmons. Miss Irene Camp gave some splendid suggestions on "Child Reading."

A round table discussion followed on "Can we revive reading as a family activity by using books, articles and stories that would be enjoyable to and all ages?"

Arkansas' U.S. Tax Declines Slightly

Only Nine Showed Income in 1932 of $25,000—None Over $40,000.

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—The report of the Bureau of Internal Revenue over the week-end on income statistics for 1932 revealed an increase over 1931 in the number of returns filed and the amount tax paid in Arkansas, but a drop in the total net income reported by individuals.

There were 10,350 individual returns filed in the state in 1932, showing total net income of $24,716,119 and tax payments amounting to $215,937. The year before 9,873 individuals filed returns, reporting total net income of $29,256,385 and tax payments of $107,830.

Only nine individuals in Arkansas reported incomes in excess of $25,000, and there were none over $40,000. The bulk of returns were filed by persons with incomes of $3,000 and less.

Returns were filed by 2,306 corporations, 449 reporting net incomes totaling $139,578 and 1,679 reporting deficits amounting to $14,579. Returns were filed by 128 inactive corporations, with no income data.

Chairman Hill, Washington Democrats of the House Ways and Means subcommittee, which is studying tax laws, is one advocate of such a plan. Others feel as he does.

Play and Christmas Benefit for Midway

The Home Demonstration club of Midway, LaFayette county, will present a three-act comedy play, "Clubbing a Husband" at the schoolhouse Saturday night, December 22. After the play old Santa will be introduced, with a community Christmas tree for every one. Bring your gifts and spend a pleasant evening. Proceeds go for club work in the community.

Home Clubs

The Liberty Home Demonstration club met Friday evening December 14, 1934 at the home of Mrs. S. B. Brister, for the purpose of electing officers for the coming year.

The following were elected: President, Mrs. Guy Hicks; vice president, Mrs. J. F. Moody; secretary, Miss Beulah Hicks; reporter, Juanita Calhoun.

The club then adjourned until the next club meeting day.

bills as they passed through the committee, was what Long said in "explaining" them. They were printed later and laid on House members' desks.

Long gave his own interpretation and the committee approved every bill as fast as the "Kingfish" laid them down.

Franchise Tax Again
Striking again at the "corporations" he always assails in pleas to "the common people" in his campaign harangues, Long showed through a bill increasing the corporation franchise tax for the third time in six months.

He said it was to raise money for dental and pharmacy colleges for Louisiana State University's medical center in New Orleans. The bill raised the corporation franchise tax to $2 for every $1,000 of capital stock.

Tell 'Em Apart? Parents Can't

Even their parents can't tell which is baby and which is Junior. These twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Fairbanks, of Independence, Mo., are such near-perfect doubles that they alternated in the lead role in a school play and no one else knew of the change. That's Dorothy at the left.

Business to Set Up Capital Office

90 American Executives to Represent Industry at Washington

WHITS SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va.—(AP)—The high commander of American business Monday undertook to develop a plan whereby commerce and industry may set up a continuing agency in Washington to represent them.

Gathered in a joint conference on business recovery, 90 major executives set themselves to accomplish a program acceptable as a basis of co-operation with industry if possible, but even if such co-operation is not possible, to unify industry at all costs.

No definite platform has been developed, but C. B. Ames, president of the Texas Company and chairman of the conference, said serious consideration was being given to creation of a continuing body which might set out business objectives to the administration and otherwise to serve business interests.

Air Liner Overruns Little Rock Field

Big Condor Ship Damaged, None Hurt, on Too-Short Runway

LITTLE ROCK.—Because a section of East Seventeenth street cuts off a large portion of Municipal Airport, leaving insufficient room for heavy planes to land and take off without difficulty, a west bound American Airlines Condor crashed through a six-foot wire fence at the north end of the airport about 7 Monday night. The plane came to a stop on the pavement of East Tenth street.

The seven passengers, pilot, co-pilot and stewardess suffered no injury, although the big plane was damaged badly.

The accident occurred at Pilot Paul Vance of Fort Worth, Texas, was attempting to land the ship. The field was slightly wet and slick, and although the pilot locked the brakes and attempted to turn the plane, the ship skidded more than 100 yards and struck the fence.

American Airlines officials and federal authorities have said several times that the landing field in its present form is too short for safe night flying, but this was the first accident which has resulted.

Democratic Vote Off But Slightly

Congress Popular Vote Percentage Nearly Equal That of 1932

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—Despite unprecedented Democratic strength in congress voted last month, an Associated Press compilation over the week-end showed candidates of that party for the house polled a slightly lower percentage of the major party vote than in 1932.

The practically complete and mostly official tabulation of the ballots for the house gave a 32,279,792 total for all parties.

A fractional diminution of the Democratic percentages in the Midwest farm country was more than offset in the industrial East and mining West.

Here are the comparative house totals:

	1934	1932
Democrats	17,440,438	20,386,334
Republicans	13,512,749	15,715,010
Others	1,326,605	1,379,747
Total	32,279,792	37,481,091

it will not be voted on until the general election in 1936 and if it is adopted it will relieve homesteads from the payment of taxes, beginning in 1937.

An amendment was submitted two years ago and was defeated because its provisions were too broad. The proposed amendment is a suggestion as to what would be expedient.

"The General Assembly may think the amount is too small or too large or it may want to make provisions that homesteads, along with other property, may be continued to be taxed for school purposes as the electors of various school districts vote the school tax."

"I think that the General Assembly can find some other way to produce revenue to take the place of that which will not be collected by reason of the homestead exemption."

Attorney Accused of Ransom "Cut"

Affidavit Charges Urschel Kidnapers Split With Lawyer Laska

DENVER, Colo.—(AP)—An affidavit, outlining the manner in which Ben Laska, a Denver attorney, allegedly received part of the Charles F. Urschel ransom money was disclosed Tuesday by government prosecutors.

The sworn narrative, from the stepson of one of the kidnapers, was disclosed in connection with the filing of complicity charges against the attorney.

Laska, gray-haired, pleader dabherr defense in half a hundred "hopeless" causes, represented Albert L. Bates one of 16 persons convicted in the $200,000 kidnaping of the Oklahoma City millionaire. Now Laska is in custody—temporarily at least—fighting an indictment against him and James C. Mathers of Oklahoma City for splitting the spoils of the crime.
